

McCook Field P-Numbers

The following list was compiled by Warren Bodie through the good offices of Miss Jennie Reeves, custodian of the Wright Field still photo files, and checked with independent data supplied by Peter M. Bowers, Wm. T. Larkins and John Sloan. Additional information is requested from the membership since this list serves as a valuable cross-reference index of the McCook Field (later Wright Field) work of 1918 through 1930.

Aviation historians and photograph collectors have long noted the P-number placed on the rudder of various aircraft of the early 1920's. These numbers were used to identify airplanes with a particular test project and it is felt that these should be called Project numbers. However, another school of thought holds that this simply means "plane" number. Comment on this is invited.

Many of the test projects, such as those on performance, have importance since they were made on representative aircraft under engineering test conditions. The result were published in the Air Service Information Circulars by the Engineering Division, Air Service, McCook Field. A partial list of these follows giving, in order, the P-number, the number of the A.S.I.C., and type of test:

P-32	No. 214, Cooling System Tests	P-162	No. 290, Performance Test
P-116	No. 294, Cooling System Tests	P-165	No. 288, Performance Test
P-125	No. 287, Performance Test	P-170	No. 285, Performance Test
P-132	No. 160, Technical Orders No.18	P-245	No. 414, Performance Test
	No. 132, Performance Test	P-246	No. 413, Performance Test
P-133	No. 156, Cooling System Tests	P-284	No. 457, Performance Test
P-135	No. 271, Cooling System Tests	P-285	No. 456, Performance Test
P-145	No. 173, Performance Tests	P-329	No. 507, Performance Test
P-152	No. 280, Performance Test	P-365	No. 506, Performance Test
P-154	No. 286, Performance Test	P-369	No. 522, Performance Test

For those unfamiliar with the A.S.I.C.'s, these gave details of the airplane, test conditions, pilot's observations on flight characteristics and are quite useful for reference. Many very good photographs appear also.
